“Jumana's brush and colors carried her to the playgrounds of childhood, to Jerusalem, to Jericho and Jaffa, though all of Palestine's cities, villages and landscapes are present in her artworks.

The important aspect in Jumana El Husseini's paintings is the presence of refined and delicate elements such as birds, butterflies, flowers and sunsets along with elements of force and stability such as horses, tigers, panthers, houses, trees, mainly the prickly pear tree, a symbol of resistance and belonging. Aren't all these figures and forms renderings of childhood memories carried by Jumana from the land of Palestine, especially Jerusalem where she was born, to the various exiles after being obliged to leave her beloved country?”

"Hussein Madi's iconic style of oversized geometric figures, sensual yet with primal lines reflects the influence of European modern art masters such as Pablo Picasso and Henri Matisse.

On the other hand, his structured abstract works, with a timeless aesthetic and a harmony of colour and form include the repetition of motifs with rounded edges that draw on the abstract designs of Islamic art."

“Since 2006, and in parallel to their individual practice, they [Laure Ghorayeb and Mazen Kerbaj, mother and son] have developed a four-handed practice and unique style, where the minutiae of Laure's strokes merge with Mazen's big-nosed silhouettes. There is no need to recognize who does what in the flurry and entanglement of their drawings and correspondence: one need simply keep up with their frenzy and their limitless ambition.”

A group embrace lies at the heart of this beautiful bronze piece by the Iraqi sculptor Mohamed Ghani Hikmat who was known for his love of depicting people from his homeland in his work. Arms outstretched, each protagonist is reaching forward, in circular fashion, to meet and greet their nearest and dearest. The differing heights suggest the sculptor's subjects are parents and child, but camaraderie amongst a group of friends or even strangers taking comfort are other interpretations. The clean, curved lines so characteristic of Hikmat's work relay the heightened emotion of his subjects as they lean towards, heads tilted and legs grounded, in search of the solace, comfort or satisfaction that physical closeness can provide.

Widely regarded as one of Iraq's most important artists, Hikmat was born in 1929 in Baghdad. He graduated from the Institute of Fine Art in his home city, after which he moved to Rome, where he studied at the Accademia di Belle Arti and the Istituto di Zaka in Florence, specialising in casting bronze. Hikmat's large-scale works dot public spaces around the country. Drawing on Iraq's heritage and history, they became iconic landmarks on the local landscape, instantly recognisable to locals and visitors alike, although some have also been damaged or destroyed in the conflict there. Hikmat exhibited on a large scale, carving a niche as a leading light on the Iraqi art scene, while also holding several shows abroad. He also joined a number of pioneering, key art movements and groups, becoming highly respected in these organisations. In addition, he taught sculpture at the Baghdad Institute of Fine Art and the College of Architectural Engineering at the University of Baghdad. Hikmat died in 2011 in Amman, Jordan.

In this work for sale by Jamil Molaeb, the city that gives its name to the title of the piece is instantly recognisable, even though the artist has depicted its iconic landmarks in his own inimitable style. The Statue of Liberty looks down on the scene, although she has been repositioned from her usual spot in the water to oversee a typically vibrant, underground nightlife scene. Further along, another world-famous structure, Brooklyn Bridge, is given similar treatment, positioned so that it sits above a music club, where the artist's signature silhouette figures are immersed in their activities. The scene is compartmentalised and yet part of a whole, relaying the rich diversity for which New York is world famous.

Born in 1948 in Baissour, Chouf, Molaeb studied Fine Arts at the Lebanese University in Beirut, under the tuition of Paul Guiragossian and Chafic Abboud. He furthered his studies at the Pratt Institute in New York City and Ohio State University, returning to Lebanon to teach at several educational institutions. A painter and sculptor who also makes mosaics, Molaeb often brings motifs that reveal his other ways of working onto his canvases, such as motifs and fragmented elements. His work has been extensively exhibited worldwide and is held in prestigious public and private collections, including The World Bank in Washington, DC. Molaeb also established his own museum in Baissour.

In a composition typical of Lebanon's most celebrated painter's renowned figurative work, the painting for sale at auction has two boys as its subjects that are somehow so entwined that they almost appear as one. Huddled one behind the other in a large chair, heads bent, the youngsters are pored over a book, one in traditional white clothing, with the viewer acutely aware of their concentration. Yet even though we can sense their studiousness, there is something playful about the two protagonists, perhaps their proximity to each other or cross-legged posture, which adds a light-hearted touch to a scene full of intensity.

Born in Jerusalem in 1926 to survivors of the Armenian genocide, Paul Guiragossian moved to Lebanon with his family in 1947-48. His talent for art was evident early on and was noticed by other children, as he recalled: "I began to draw when I was seven years of age. There were children who used to play with their paper kites in their gardens amongst the olive trees [...] they would ask me to draw on the paper that they would use for their kites. They used to like my kites best as they were full with many colors." Guiragossian was awarded a scholarship to study at the Academy of Fine Arts in Florence. He also spent time in Paris, before returning to Beirut. Guiragossian was obsessed with the human form, creating his figures in vibrant colours in paintings that are marked by force, beauty and sentience.

In 1974, Paul lost his leg in an elevator accident and subsequently had to endure multiple surgeries both in Beirut and in Chicago, US. He returned to Lebanon in 1975 and his recovery until the end of 1976 prevented him from painting large paintings, therefore he was only able to produce small pieces and didn't do any significant solo exhibitions until 1977.

"La Première Leçon" was one of the few available works in his studio, which the current owner was able to purchase. The larger size of this work means that the artist was able to produce while he was adapting to his new disability.

Depicted in vibrant, regal colours and proudly monopolising the entire canvas, Ismail Fattah's subject is a glorious rooster. The shades of golden yellow used to depict his feathers, dotted only with emerald green and brown to highlight the bird's impressive fantail reinforce the princely presence of this creature, while the splashes of red that show off his bright red comb and wattle - a key tool used to attract females – remind us of his masculinity. A petrol blue background ensures there is no distraction from this statesmanlike subject.

Born in 1934 in Basra, Fattah studied painting and sculpture under the instruction of Jewad Selim at the Institute of Fine Arts, Baghdad, before furthering his training in Rome, where he studied sculpture at the Accademia di Belle Arti, and ceramics at the Accademia San Giacomo. He went on to become a significant post-war and contemporary painter. Fattah taught ceramics and sculpture at the Academy of Fine Arts in Baghdad. He was also a member of several movements, including the Baghdad Group of Modern Art and the Society of Iraqi Artists for Abstract Art, of which he was president for seven years. He was also a founding member of both the New Vision group and Al-Zawya, exhibiting his work at their first group show.

Fattah's work was exhibited widely at home and abroad, including in Qatar, where he lived for several years. He also undertook several public commissions, including the renowned Monument of the Martyr. He died in 2004 in Baghdad.

“Man is a unity that embodies both the means and the goals...”

Art is the unification with the beauty of love and altruism that seeks continuous emancipation throughout life.”

- Aref El Rayess

This haunting, mixed media work on canvas by the prolific, award-winning Lebanese artist depicts a small gathering of people seemingly watching and waiting. There is a sense of anticipation in the work, heightened by the opening through which one of the characters appears to be keeping watch. The use of velvet, dusky colours adds to the atmosphere, indicating a twilight or dawn scene, while a central splash of pink suggests a child's face and gives a feel of the nativity to the entire composition. A native of Aley, Mount Lebanon, El Rayess started out as a self-taught, multi-media artist, who practiced painting, etching, sculpture and tapestry.

El Rayess lived in Africa for many years, traveling between Senegal and Paris. While based in France, he joined several ateliers, while also studying at the Académie de la Grande Chaumière. He then spent time in Florence after gaining a scholarship from the Italian government. In 1963, El Rayess returned to Lebanon, where he worked and taught at the Lebanese University and the American Lebanese University.

A modern avant-garde artist, he embraced several genres during his career, from naïf to expressionist, before moving to abstract art. His work has featured in many collective and solo exhibitions worldwide and can also be found in public and private collections, including the UNESCO Palace in Paris and Palestine Square, Jeddah.

“He sculpted slender shapes with no sharp angles. Even in his cubic and rectangular structures, the joints are always rounded. Sensitive and demanding, he polished the surfaces in the extreme, making them soft and sensual, allowing the stone to remain rough; the relief was more welcoming than disturbing. The curves come into dialogue with each other, flirt, intersect, defy or protect themselves. Without suffering from any symmetry, the works of Alfred Basbous can nevertheless breathe a balance.”

- Fadi Basbous, Alfred Basbous's son

Basbous's works are particularly touching because they exude a deeply ingrained sincerity. Focused on the aesthetic principles of shape, movement, line, material and harmony, his sculptures are marks of genuineness and acceptance of beauty. This aversion towards frivolous and meaningless embellishments echoes his own philosophy of simplicity.

Alfred Basbous was born in Rachana in 1924. His first exhibition in Beirut, at the Alecco Saab gallery in 1958, marked the beginning of his success and introduced him into the world of sculpture. In 1960, he received a scholarship from the French government and became a pupil of the sculptor René Collamarini at «The National Fine Arts School in Paris» (L'ecole Nationale des Beaux-Arts in Paris). In 1961, his works were included in the International Sculpture Exhibition at the Musée Rodin, in Paris.

Throughout his life, Basbous won many awards including the «Prix de l'Orient» in Beirut in 1963 and the prize of Biennale in The Alexandria in 1974. When he died in 2006, the President of the Lebanese Republic, in order to honour him, awarded him the «Medal of the Lebanese Order of Merit in Gold.»

“Image representations may be obscure, veiled, and ambiguous, capable of creating structures of mystery. Trapping the thoughts and emotions of the viewer... the more the ambiguity, the meaning loses its sharpness and it becomes indecisive; pushing us into allusive modalities of potential sense.”

A calmness encompasses this work by the well-known Lebanese abstract artist Hanibal Srouji, perhaps in part down to the choice of light-coloured, natural shades of off-white and beige, contrasted only with specks of gold-brown and the outline of what could possibly be walls of rock across a seascape. The scene is open to interpretation, but there is a feeling that serenity will be short-lived? The viewer's eye is quickly drawn to shapes in what might be water, prompting questions that remain unanswered. Are these swimmers, scattered sporadically in the sea, enjoying their leisure time? And if so, will they eventually make their way to the shore or will they be given a less-than-welcome greeting when arriving on land? Indeed, will they make it at all?

Srouji was born in Beirut in 1957 and raised in Saïda, before fleeing Lebanon with his family in 1976 following the outbreak of the civil war. He graduated from Concordia University in Canada with a Master's degree in Fine Arts and has taught for many years worldwide, currently holding the position of Chair and Assistant Professor at the Lebanese American University in Beirut.

Srouji's work has its roots in the deep wounds, trauma and damage inflicted by war, witnessed in both his homeland and the region. He is known for his wide and sometimes unusual choice of tools in his work which range from fire, carbon and graphite to coloured pencil, neon and acrylic. While his work is often described as abstract configurations of the scars of war, there is also a glimmer of hope attached to them, supported by their dreamlike quality which is reinforced by his use of pastel shades. His work has been widely exhibited in Lebanon and abroad.

«I never work one painting at a time, but a series of paintings on an idea that has been ripening for weeks. I paint the same composition until the problem is resolved, and my self-satisfaction is achieved...But the spontaneity, speed, and accuracy are the fruits of a patient discipline, the result of a conquest. Every stroke of a brush contains my artistic history.»

“There is one fundamental question which pervades the entirety of Oussama Baalbaki’s work to date: what is the place of painting after photography?”

Baalbaki’s paintings are expressionistic in tone, but they tend toward the mimetic. To represent reality today, he paints with the recognition of the technologically reproducible, mediated image. If photography attempts to capture the perpetually fleeting present – to embalm reality – painting stretches its duration, so as to free it from the constraints of historical time.”

- Saleh Barakat, Agial Gallery

Huguette Caland's passion and skill in the field of fashion design are to the fore in this canvas offered at auction, with her hallmark intricate detailing evident in floral margins combined with bold lines typical of her style. The pattern is pretty and romantic, yet the signature black lines that cut across the canvas and indeed weave through much of her work are given a different treatment in the centre, ensuring this piece also has an edgy, contemporary feel.

A Lebanese painter, sculptor and fashion designer, Caland was born in 1931 and studied art at the American University of Beirut. She divided her time between France and California for many years, gaining a considerable following in Paris. Her work is intriguing, often erotic and vacillating between the overt and explicit, and suggestive and subtle. Women, their bodies and their place in the world are recurring themes in Caland's work, inevitably, since she decided to spend time alone working in France, leaving her husband and children to do so, even though she remained committed to them all. Caland's work has been exhibited extensively across the globe. The artist has enjoyed a deserved upsurge in popularity recently, with her work featured in the Hammer Museum's 2016 Made in LA biennial, the Sharjah Biennial and is currently on show at Tate St Ives in the UK.

Brightly coloured, with seasonal, summery overtones, Helen Khal's painting of a potted plant is fresh and uplifting, with the full blooms in graduated shades of vibrant red and pastel pinks against a sunshine-yellow, sky-blue and meadow-green background hinting at the prospect of happy times and hope for the future. Slightly titled, the angle of the blue pot gives this still-life scene an element of movement, reminding us of the summer 'rush' and heady days that the warmer months can bring with them.

Born in 1923 in Pennsylvania, Helen Khal was of Lebanese descent. She studied at both the Lebanese Academy of Fine Arts (ALBA) in Beirut and at the Art Students League in New York. Throughout her life, she divided her time between the US and Lebanon. Khal held her first solo show in Galerie Alecco Saab in Beirut in 1960 and, three years later, set up Gallery One, Lebanon's first permanent art gallery. Other solo exhibitions followed in Beirut and abroad. She also took part in the Biennales held in Alexandria and Sao Paolo. Khal wrote and lectured on art, working as an art critic in Lebanon and abroad for several years and teaching at AUB. During her years in the US, she was publications consultant to the Jordan Information Bureau. She also had a book titled 'The Woman Artist in Lebanon' published in 1987. Khal died in 2009.

The Iraqi painter and sculptor Nouri Al Rawi was often inspired by the rural settings of Rawa, Ambar Province, where he was born, and this work on sale today harks back to those domestic scenes. Snow-white buildings, a common sight in his birthplace, complete with domed or flat roofs and arched doors, are edged with greenery and dotted with rocks in this beautifully composed set-up, pitted against a vibrant, multi-coloured sky. The buildings inch upwards, suggesting hills and height, while the darker-shaded backdrop hints at rolling verdure beyond. The landscape is devoid of people and yet there is a sense that this is a village full of activity; one that will spring to life when the time dictates.

Born in 1925, Al Rawi was a trained teacher who went on to graduate from the Institute of Fine Arts in Baghdad 1959. He travelled abroad, having gained scholarships to further his studies in Yugoslavia and Portugal. Aside from carving a niche as a well-known and prolific painter and sculptor, Al Rawi played a key role in developing the Iraqi modern art movement, co-founding the Baghdad Modern Art group. He led a multi-pronged professional life as an art critic, author, broadcaster and art administrator. Al Rawi also helped to set up Baghdad's National Museum of Modern Art, serving as its first director and helping to acquire many of the works that formed the backbone of its collection. He died in Baghdad in 2014.

The facial details might be scant, but the hallmark characteristics of traditional headwear and beard tell us that the subject of the Lebanese artist Mounira Al Solh's work in this painting is a man of certain standing. Seemingly suspended on a stand, this portrait with a difference is captivating in the extreme; the hollow, black eyes give the protagonist an air of bathos, chiming with the work's title, and reinforcing the theme of departure on both specific and broader levels. The simple, stark white background, challenged only by the metallic, black base, simply adds to the subject's apparent solitariness.

Born in 1978 in Beirut, Al Solh studied painting at the Lebanese University in her home city and at Fine Arts, the Gerrit Rietveld Academy, Amsterdam. Aside from painting, she works across a range of media, including embroidery, drawing and video installations. Al Solh has held several solo exhibitions, most recently at the Art Institute Chicago (2018), ALT, Istanbul (2016), KW Institute for Contemporary Art, Berlin (2014) and Sfeir-Semler Gallery, Beirut (2014). Group exhibitions include the 56th Venice Biennial, Italy (2015). Her work can also be found in public collections around the world, including the Art Institute of Chicago, Illinois; Centre Georges Pompidou, Paris; Stedelijk Museum, Amsterdam; Pinakothek, Munich; Saradar Art Collection, Beirut; and Kamel Lazaar Foundation, Tunis.

A multidisciplinary artist, he works in painting, printmaking and new media, and has been regularly featured in galleries and festivals across the Gulf, Europe and North America. His works explore the approach between reality and the perception of reality, deconstructing the metaphysical world around him, fragmenting and reconstructing images at the verge of psychosis and surrealism.

“Rare is to see the work of a self-taught painter that engages directly with abstraction without having first tried his hand at a more primary form or deconstructed the painting environment from anthropomorphic shapes and figurative work.

Aram Jughian is one of those artists that through experimentation arrived at a single form that yet is composed of many different units of meaning. Painting almost intuitively, the color fields overlap with distant objects, texts and other more conceptual devices. The different layers, sometimes either thickened or diluted through dripping and found material reach solidity and make manifest the visual maturity of an artist for whom painting is an absolute task.”

A scintillating dance performance by a group of whirling dervishes is the topic for this painting for sale by the Syrian painter Mamdouh Kashlan.

Marked by a somewhat symmetrical format which reinforces the Sufi turning and choreography of the religious dance, the artist depicts the group in mid-flow in this figurative piece, with his main protagonist in the foreground, arms crossed across his chest, and three dancers either side tailing outwards in an A shape, limbs stretched in hallmark style. The dancers' tilted heads somehow relay the emotion and concentration that their art requires, even though little is evident in the way of facial features. Aside from the raised arms and angled headwear, Kashlan also captures the movement of the dancers through his clever use of shaded colour in the pleats of their skirts, some of which fan out, while others appear caught in a moment in time.

Born in 1929 in Damascus, Kashlan has held more than 300 exhibitions in his homeland and around the world. His work can be found in the national museums of Damascus, Aleppo and Deir Atieh, and the Presidential Palace, and also at the Sursock in Beirut. Elsewhere, his work is on view in Cairo and Paris, as well as in other European cities. In 1996, Kashlan was awarded the Pioneer's Prize from the Ministry of Culture.

This artwork by the Palestinian artist Abdul Rahman Katanani has been created using his preferred recycled materials, while also serving as a reminder that he was first known as a caricaturist. The subject is a young girl, elevated in mid jump or flight, seemingly being lifted away by what we interpret as a balloon in a brilliantly vibrant shade of red. The underlying theme – a bid for freedom or the dream of breaking free - is a popular one for the artist, who was born in 1982 in the Sabra refugee camp in the western suburbs of Beirut during the Lebanese civil war.

Katanani is influenced on many levels from his time in the camp. The sense of feeling confined, oppressed and stateless permeates his work, as does the poverty that was around him. Hopelessness is a recurring theme – however, this is balanced with a sense of hopefulness. Katanani is also drawn to materials that were part of everyday life in Sabra, such as corrugated iron, barbed wire, discarded items and debris, as is evidenced in the work for sale. He has a Master's in Fine Arts from the Lebanese University and was the recipient of the Sursock's Prize for Young Artists in 2009. He has held several solo shows in the region and Europe, while participating in a significant number of collectives.

“The method in a work painted by [Jean] Khalifé reveals a presence much out of ordinary - a presence of strength, energy, and a virile rationality of design. Another factor comes to light: the quality of the graceful and energetic colour that explodes in flowers and bouquets and the large contrasting surfaces of sunlight, shadow, and sea.

Drawing and colour, however, remain subservient to an inner truth, truth found in the luminous foreheads of young girls that a contrast of light and shade causes to «hesitate». Sadness, hope, dialogue, exchange - so many gestures of soul and body which express love and expectation. Elsewhere it is the reign of silence and of anguish which can be seen... His painting is equally inspired by those profound movements of the soul which give to the human body such a wealth of emotional expression. And it is essentially a human message, a witness of human tenderness.”

Painter, sculptor and engraver, Hussein Madi was born in Chabaa, in south Lebanon in 1938. He received his initial training at ALBA (l'Academie Libanaise des Beaux Arts). Subsequently, he went to Rome where he enrolled at the Academia di Belle Arte and at the Academia di San Jacomo. In Rome he undertook advanced research on cultural heritage in the Arab world, particularly in Egypt. He went back to Lebanon and taught sculpture and engraving at the Institute of Fine Arts of the Lebanese University and, from 1958 to 1962, at ALBA. Since 1964 Madi has been living between Beirut and Rome. He has been exhibiting in Europe since 1965.

Hussein Madi makes use of the art of calligraphy, today consisting of symbols which were originally pictograms. Madi tries to take these symbols back to the time when writing was half-picture, half-symbol. He has thus reconciled the real, represented by a partial image, with the symbolic, connected with the inner life of man. Between these two poles, he has built marvelous worlds, the realistic one which binds man to the earth and the symbolic one binding man to his conception of the world. In this manner, he satisfies both the eye and the mind at the same time.

Madi's contemporary artwork denotes an extremely profound understanding of the artistic and spiritual oriental tradition. He has held over 50 solo exhibitions in Beirut, Rome, Milan, Venice, Geneva, Tokyo and Dubai. Madi's work is housed in many private and public collections around the Arab world.

A delicately positioned trio of candles or incense sticks is the subject of this painting by the late, well-known Lebanese painter Elie Kanaan.

The choice of subdued, pastel shades by the artist and the smoke that emits from the candles gives the painting an ethereal look, further enhanced by the way in which the three-pronged composition is seemingly suspended in mid-air, amid a multi-faceted cloud of smoke that melds into a light-hued background. The artist opts for deeper colours to depict the holders of both the candles or sticks and containers themselves, adding a base for both his subjects and the broader painting, while drawing the viewer in, before encouraging them to follow the plumes of smoke upwards. The mood is one of contemplation, with Kanaan’s audience perhaps reminded of the times in life when we turn to candles, whether for support and help or prayer and reflection.

The French poet Alain Bosquet has highlighted what he describes as the “thrilling suspense where everything remains suggested, possible, and unrealized” in Kanaan’s brush stroke, moving from a haziness towards the definite, as is evidenced in this work. Born in Beirut in 1926, Kanaan studied at the Academie de la Grande Chaumière in Paris. He also visited Italy before returning to Lebanon. He began exhibiting regularly from the 1950s onwards, both in Lebanon and abroad and won a number of awards. His work featured in several biennales and can today be found in a number of private collections. Kanaan also taught drawing and painting at the Collège Notre-Dame de Jamhour, the Lebanese University and the Lebanese Academy of Fine Arts (ALBA). He died in 2009.

Athier Mousawi is a British Iraqi visual artist whose work over recent years has centred on posing unanswerable questions against undefined answers and forming a visual narrative between the two.

Since graduating from Central St. Martins, London in 2007, the subject of much of his work has been Iraq and his diasporic relationship to his intrinsic yet foreign homeland. Of the main constructs used within Athier's paintings the initial response is that of scale and colour which guide the viewer through his compositions. Symbolism in these large-scale paintings are weaved through layers of organic figurative and geometric Islamic forms. Large shapes frame moments of detail, acting like windows into another, very personal place, which the viewer is invited into.

Although predominantly a painter, his more graphic drawing style uses similar devices of surrounding intense narrative with rigid forms.

“His vision is so intense that you have the impression of waking up from a dream when looking at his works. It is as if you had never really seen, in depth and in relief, what a simple fish is. Abdelke penetrates the skull, or the fish, or a woman’s shoe, just like Michaux ‘entered’ in an apple.

Observation and the utmost attention are not enough. Everything happens as if he wanted to re-invent the world, protect it for good from offence, indifference and omission. It is as if he was himself-dead in front of the ox’s skull and that he wanted all living phenomena to replace him, the Syrian engraver. It is not ‘Abdelke’ who interests him but rather everything that Abdelke isn’t, everything that will survive to Abdelke and everything that goes beyond, far beyond, Abdelke.”

Water's critical role in life as a basic necessity and one that can never be taken for granted, even in modern cities such as Beirut, provide the inspiration for this thought-provoking artwork for sale by Fanny Seller.

The artist created the piece at the height of a blistering summer, when Lebanon's capital was also hit by a build-up of garbage, choosing acrylics mixed with plenty of water as her medium to create a link with the title of the piece and its theme. Dominating the work is a girl picking up a large receptacle of water from outside a building, highlighting a lack of running water. Here, Fanny draws on her time at Mansion House, a collective for artists, where she witnessed plants and trees struggling to survive in the heat. Dry pastels in a shade of blue are used to convey the parched leaves and brittle branches of the tree, while the choice of her protagonist relays the message that children are the most vulnerable when the elements we need to survive are in short supply.

Born in France, Fanny Seller obtained her degree in History of Art, followed by her Postgraduate Diploma in Cultural Management at the Sorbonne University in Paris. In 1997, after moving to Beirut, Seller began teaching Art History at the Lebanese Academy of Fine Arts.

A Lebanese native, Jack Seikaly has been experimenting with photography and developing his craft for over a decade. Rooted in an inherent attraction to landscapes and exploring global cultures, his extensive body of work has been defined by personal trips that have taken him to some of the most remote parts of the world.

About the Series:

Capturing immersive landscapes and architectural icons on the infrared spectrum, the 21-piece series is a challenge to our perceptions of the visible world. From the rice fields of China to the streets of San Francisco, this collection is the culmination of a four-year expedition across seven countries around the world. The surrealism of this invisible dimension is captured through the use of a converted infrared camera, paired with a specialized technique of editing images in a spectrum that the human eye cannot see. Designed to magnify infrared light, the camera most strikingly captures the glow in plants that represents their photosynthetic interaction with the sun. Inspired by Richard Mosse's seminal infrared series The Enclave, Jack's work strives to illuminate the importance of human perception and serves as a commentary on its breadth. With an intimate understanding of how our perceived sense of reality informs our behavior, this series seeks to broaden our personal viewpoints and challenges the lens through which we experience the physical world. The surrealism of infrared acts as a gateway into a new approach of looking at familiar subjects, the ability to view them in a different light.

About the Image:

This photograph was taken on January 6, 2018 of downtown Beirut, Lebanon. Standing atop a building near Saifi Village, it provides a great vantage point of the Mohammad Al-Amin Mosque, the St. George Maronite Cathedral, and the Grand Serail. Importantly, this picture highlights the lack of greenery and nature in Lebanon's capital city.
